The King's Toast Jane Gilgun

When James told the king he couldn't have peanut butter and strawberry jam on toast for breakfast, the king went ballistic. He ate it every morning and he wanted it this morning. He demanded to know who was to blame. The king himself was. The King had ordered the oak trees in his kingdom cut down to fuel the fire that made iron out of iron ore. He became the richest king in the world. The wind blew everything away because there were no oak trees to hold down the soil and protect the land from wind. There were no peanuts for peanut butter, no strawberries for strawberry jam, and no bread for toast. The king almost had a stroke, but with the help of James and the magician Merlina, he made a plan. He emptied his treasury to bring in huge oak trees. Soon the kingdom had peanuts, strawberries, and bread for toast not only for the king but for everyone else.
