One of the world's major problems today is the resolution of the problem in Palestine. This problem has reached such a magnitude because of the shockwaves that followed the formation of Israel in Palestine in 1948 at the behest of major world powers.

If the process of forming Israel had come about through more open and peaceful negotiation, then the result would have been more equitable and much less traumatic. The time has come for a solution to be found, most likely through genuine, serious, and peaceful international intervention. It is foolish to expect that this conflict will go away by itself, and this book is an attempt to find a more equitable path to a solution.
